Concept #36 ▶ Speak | Talk | Say | Tell

The four words below are often confused. Be sure to use them correctly.

Speak
You can "speak" loudly, quietly, politely, and with an accent. You can "speak" French or Spanish. You "speak" to an audience if making a largely formal presentation. If you "speak your mind" (idiom), you are giving your honest opinion.

Say
If you "say" what someone else said, you are usually repeating their exact words such as in "Tom said 'I'm coming.'" You can also say "He said (to me) he would come." But you can not omit the "to" such as in "He said me he would come."

Talk
You can "talk" loudly, quietly, politely, and with an accent. When a baby utters her first words we say "She's talking!" If you are giving "a talk" to an audience, it is often more of a casual two-way conversation than when you give a formal speech.

Tell
When "telling" someone what Tom said, you usually don't use Tom's exact words. You only convey the main idea as in "He told me he would come." You can "tell" a joke, a story, a lie, and the truth. You can also "tell" (order) someone to do something.

Core Idea

The four words speak, talk, say, and tell are often confused by non-native English speakers because their meanings can overlap, but they are used in different contexts. Here's a comprehensive explanation to help you understand how to use each one correctly.

Quick reference

1. Speak	Formal Presentation: "She spoke at the conference about climate change." "The president spoke to the nation last night."
2. Talk	Casual Conversations: "We talked about the movie we watched last night." "Can we talk later? I'm a bit busy right now."
3. Say	Quoting Someone: "Tom said, 'I'm coming.'" "She said that she would be late."
3. Say	Incorrect: "He said me he would come."
4. Tell	Giving Information: "He told me the news." "Can you tell me your name?"
4. Tell	Incorrect: "He told that he would come."

Key Points

1. Speak

"Speak" generally refers to the act of using your voice to say something, often in a more formal context. It can be used to describe both the ability to use a language and the action of communicating.

- Formal Presentation: "She spoke at the conference about climate change." "The president spoke to the nation last night."
- Language Ability: "He speaks three languages: English, Spanish, and Mandarin." "Do you speak French?"
- Expressing an Opinion: "You should speak your mind if you disagree." "He spoke out against the injustice he witnessed."
- Speaking Manner: "She spoke quietly so as not to disturb anyone." "Please speak loudly so everyone can hear you."

2. Talk

"Talk" is similar to "speak" but is often used in more casual or informal situations. It is also commonly used for conversations involving more than one person.

- Casual Conversations: "We talked about the movie we watched last night." "Can we talk later? I'm a bit busy right now."
- Two-way Communication: "I like to talk with my friends about our weekend plans." "She talked to her boss about getting a promotion."
- Giving a Speech or Lecture: "He gave a talk on the history of jazz." "They invited her to talk at the seminar."
- Expressing Opinions: "Let's talk about what you think went wrong." "We need to talk this over before making a decision."

3. Say

"Say" is used when you want to repeat what someone has said or to express something directly. It focuses on the words spoken rather than the act of speaking.

- Quoting Someone: "Tom said, 'I'm coming.'" "She said that she would be late."
- Expressing a Statement: "He said he was tired." "What did you say to him?"
- Reported Speech: "He said (to me) that he would come." "She said she was not interested."

Important Note: When using "say," you usually need to include "to" when you specify the person you are speaking to (e.g., "He said to me that..."), but you omit it in direct speech.

- Incorrect: "He said me he would come."
- Correct: "He said to me he would come."

4. Tell

"Tell" is used when you want to convey information, instruct someone to do something, or recount a story. It typically involves giving information directly to someone.

- Giving Information: "He told me the news." "Can you tell me your name?"
- Instructing or Ordering: "She told him to clean his room." "The teacher told the students to open their books."
- Sharing Stories or Jokes: "He told a funny joke." "Can you tell us a story?"

Important Note: Unlike "say," "tell" requires an object (the person you are speaking to) and does not need the word "to."

- Incorrect: "He told that he would come."
- Correct: "He told me that he would come."

Summary and Additional Examples

- Speak is used for more formal contexts or when referring to the act of using language: "She spoke at the ceremony."
- Talk is more informal and often refers to a two-way conversation: "They talked about their weekend plans."
- Say is used when repeating or reporting what someone has said: "He said he would be late."
- Tell is used when giving information or instructing someone: "She told him to finish his homework."

Exceptions and Special Cases

While the above guidelines cover most situations, there are some exceptions and special cases where these words might be used differently.

1. Idiomatic Expressions:

Sometimes, these words are used in idiomatic expressions where the normal rules don't apply.

- Speak: "Actions speak louder than words." (Here, "speak" is used metaphorically.) "To speak volumes" means to convey a lot of information indirectly.
- Talk: "Talk is cheap." (This means it's easy to say something but harder to do it.) "To talk someone into/out of something" means to persuade them.
- Say: "It goes without saying." (This means something is so obvious that it doesn't need to be mentioned.) "To say the least" is used to express that something is actually more serious than stated.
- Tell: "Time will tell." (This means that the outcome will become clear in the future.) "To tell the truth" is a phrase used to introduce an honest statement.

2. Regional Variations:

In different English-speaking regions, the usage of these words might slightly vary.

- In British English, "talk" is more commonly used for informal conversation than in American English, where "speak" might be preferred even in casual settings.
- In some dialects, "say" and "tell" can be used interchangeably, though this is non-standard.

3. Politeness and Formality:

The choice between these words can also depend on the level of politeness or formality required.

- "Speak" is more formal than "talk": "May I speak with you?" vs. "Can we talk?"
- "Say" can be more neutral, while "tell" can sound more direct: "He said something to me." vs. "He told me something."

Understanding these subtleties will help you navigate complex conversations and express yourself more precisely in English. By practicing with these words and paying attention to context, you'll gain confidence in using them correctly in various situations.
